Grounds to Sue a Mortgage Lender

There are a number reasons you might sue your lender:

- They have not credited you for payments you have made.
- They have violated the terms of the loan; such as attempting to foreclosure when you are not in default, demanding payment earlier or faster than the loan calls for, or charging more than they are allowed.
- They have provided false information about you to employers, credit rating agencies, or the government.
- They have improperly used the legal system—such as by attempting foreclosure, eviction, or wage garnishment when the facts don't support the situation, or when they have not provided you the notice to which you are legally entitled
