How to Select an IRS Tax Advisor or Representative.

Do not assume your current CPA, attorney, enrolled agent, accountant, IRS advisor, or relative can represent you adequately. This is a highly specialized area. I know several CPAs who are excellent accountants, and attorneys who are excellent at serving and defending lawsuits. When it comes to representing their clients before the collection division of the IRS, they fail terribly. Apply the following checklist to your current representative. It may save you a lot of money and headaches.

Only an Attorney can "Protect" you from IRS --- FLAT OUT LIE.

Beware of attorneys who tell you that you have to hire an attorney because only attorneys have privileged communication. They also say that you can be put in jail for not filing a return. This is a way of stretching the truth to scare you into their false belief. The IRS is interested in you filing your tax return and paying your taxes. They dont care about gathering evidence to put you in jail.

Assess CPA Experience level.

Ask your potential representative how many collection cases, tax returns, or offers have they done recently. Ask them to recall ones that went their way, and cases that went the IRSs way, etc. They can discuss all of this if they don't break confidentiality by not giving you the clients names. The purpose of asking these questions is not to establish their track record, but to see if they do this often. There should be no hesitation to recall from yesterday, last week, today, various calls, meetings etc. they had with the IRS.
