Thereafter, he attended Hastings College of the Law, and immediately began practicing law in the San Francisco Bay Area. After three years of representing clients in high profile litigation in Northern California, Tom was recruited to work for one of the largest law firms in Southern California where he specialized in the representation of pharmaceutical companies and medical devices manufacturers. Tom was later recruited to run the Los Angeles office of a major medical malpractice defense firm, successfully representing hundreds of doctors in the defense of medical malpractice claims. Tom has continued to successfully represent large insurance companies in the negotiation and recovery of million dollar insurance claims, as well as representing large companies in the private sector in commercial/business litigation. Over the last several years Tom has recovered millions of dollars in subrogation on behalf of the Insurance Companies he represents. Presently, Tom is working with a network of attorneys who are helping consumers who need financial restructuring. Through many different types of legal programs available to consumers today, Tom felt like he could help many of those who need help in today's economy.
