Debt Settlement Litigation

State statutes protect families from unfair and deceptive practices by companies who purport to assist in settling or adjusting their debt. These protections typically include limitations on the fees such companies can charge, rules governing business conduct, and prohibitions against misleading or deceptive representations.

Consumers who have been victimized by such business are typically afforded significant statutory remedies, including refund of fees paid, punitive damages, and recovery of attorney fees and litigation costs.

If you have engaged the services of a business to help you settle or adjust mounting debt and believe that you have been mislead, please contact us to discuss your rights as a consumer.
