Hollywood, CA

Thursday, September 09, 2010

All day long on the radio one hears promotion ads about reducing credit card debt with all kinds of different promises and claims, and many of them aren't true. The current economy has brought many people credit card problems and they honestly need solid advice. Harvey Warren's new book, Drop Debt: Surviving Credit Card Hell without Bankruptcy, is just such a resource of the nature of credit card agreements, how to objectively analyze a financial situation where credit card is impacting negatively and the best way to deal with banks in a positive and forthright manner.

Warren, in the midst of a national PR campaign, will be having a book signing at the Borders bookstore in Glendale, California on Saturday, September 18 between 2:00 and 4 pm. But providing the book is only part of his mission to help people through these tough times. He is actively fostering a powerful national coalition of consumer advocates, lawyers, banking and collection leadership to establish guidelines for non-adversarial debt relief through non-profit credit counseling. A graduate of Ithaca College with a Master of Science degree from Syracuse University, Warren has worked with tens of thousands of debt-crushed consumers and appears frequently on radio and television commenting on the consumer debt crisis in America.

Drop Debt is a book about people just like you and me who find themselves at the end of their financial rope and don't know where to turn, what to do or who to trust. In particular this is a book about trouble with credit cards and how to get out of that trouble without bankruptcy. Drop Debt reveals the facts you need to know to help use the right service, before the wrong service uses you.

As a double dip recession looms in the months ahead millions of Americans will face foreclosure and bankruptcy in unprecedented numbers. From legitimate nonprofit credit counseling to controversial debt settlement providers to use and abuse of bankruptcy, Drop Debt presents dozens of personal stories of victories by real people who took their debt head on and won.

Stop hiding; start answering your phone and opening your mail. It's time to regain you self respect and self esteem. If credit cards are killing you, it's time to Drop Debt.
